Topic	Hidden People in Sports
	(Introduction) There are important hidden helpers in sports.
Pacers in a Marathon	Pit Crews in Car Racing	Sherpas in Mountain Climbing
What are pacers?	What is a pit crew?	What are sherpas?
Pacers are experienced runners, who help other runners manage their race better.	A pit crew is a team who works in a pit, a place on the side of the race track and check the racing cars during a race.	Sherpas originate from the Sherpa tribe, which lives in the eastern part of Nepal. Sherpas are also used for people who have good climbing skills and know their way around the mountains and help climbers on Everest in particular.
What is their job?	What is their job?	What is their job?
Their job is to run with flags or balloons showing their finish time so that runners can keep track of their time.	Their job is to check the cars and change the tires whenever drivers stop during a race.	Their job is to support Mount Everest climbers in various ways.
How do they help runners?	How do they help car racers?	How do they help climbers?
Runners can follow the pacer of their choice, and finish the marathon in a particular time more easily.	During a pit stop, which can be as short as 2 seconds, they check the car and change worn-out tires in perfect harmony.	They help Mt. Everest climbers by leading them to the top of the mountain, putting up tents, and carrying bags for them.
What is their goal?	What is their goal?	What is their goal?
Their goal is not to win the race themselves but to help runners achieve their goals more easily.	Their goal as a cooperative team is to help car racers finish their races without car problems.	Their goal is not to succeed climbing Mount Everest themselves but to help other climbers to do it successfully.

I haven't given much attention to those hidden people since they are not usually shown on the spot. However, I got to know that their jobs are important for sports players to perform well. I need to explore more hidden jobs in sports.
