|------------------------|--|
| Conclusion / Comment : | Mr. Boggis faced the consequence of lying to people about the real value of things. There may have been some dealers taking advantage of people. However, such dealers will not succeed any more in modern society. Consumers share their reviews on their purchases and deals on social media. Being honest is a good policy indeed. |

B. 6과 본문 글이 등장 인물 (Mr. Boggis, Rummins, Bert) 중 한 명을 골라 그 사람의 입장에서 이야기를 다시 쓰시오.

<예시> Hi, I'm Cyril Boggis, and I'm an antique furniture dealer in London. I buy antique furniture at a low price and then sell it at a high price. People wonder where I get all the antique furniture and what is the secret behind my business. To be honest, the secret is simple. I take advantage of people who don't know the real value of their furniture.

One Sunday, I visited a house and I met Rummins and his son, Bert. I found a valuable table in their living room, which was a priceless piece of eighteenth-century English furniture. Although I was so excited, I lied to them that it was just a reproduction. I also lied to them that what I needed was just the legs of the table. After some bargaining, I made the final offer of thirty pounds and Rummins agreed.

Then, I went out to bring my car. I was so happy that I could not help smiling. I couldn't believe my luck. However, when I came back, I was so shocked that I became speechless. The legs of the table had been cut off and Rummins told me that they had done that as a favor and wouldn't charge me for it. It seems that they were worried that the table might not go in my car and I might not pay them.

Hi, I'm _____, and I _____.
