W: Have you ever heard of the angel shark? Historically, the angel shark’s range included the Atlantic, Mediterranean, and Black Seas, but commercial fishing has decreased its population. The angel shark is a wonderful marine creature that lives in warm temperate oceans. It has small and sharp teeth in its jaws. But unlike typical sharks, it has a flat body and broad fins. Hidden in the sand, the angel shark waits for a small fish to approach. When a fish comes near, the shark swallows it whole. Now, I’ll show you some pictures.

W: Last class we learned about insects that can transmit certain diseases. Today I’ll explain more about one of those insects: a mosquito. Mosquitoes can carry many types of diseases caused by viruses. The mosquito can transmit diseases from one human to another. These diseases include dengue fever, yellow fever and malaria. Dengue fever is especially dangerous for children. Yellow fever can be fatal. There is no treatment, though yellow fever can be prevented by vaccination. Like yellow fever, malaria is a fatal disease but can be treated with drugs. Malaria can often be avoided using the ABCD approach. That is, A. Awareness of the risk of getting malaria. B. Bite prevention. Avoid mosquito bites. C. Check whether you must take malaria prevention tablets. D. Diagnosis. See a doctor immediately if you have malaria-like symptoms. The diseases mosquitoes carry can develop fast, so it’s important that they are diagnosed and treated quickly.
