18 다음 글의 밑줄 친 this가 가리키는 것으로 가장 적절한 것은?

In primitive societies, people had to fight wild beasts, not only for self-defense, but also for food. In addition, they couldn't avoid coming into conflict with other groups. As the result, people ended up practicing different forms of fighting to protect themselves. During this period, when grappling was a predominant method of combat, various techniques were invented. And, naturally, this developed into a martial art. A wall painting in an ancient tomb shows this fact and there are many historical records of it as well. Nowadays, this is a type of folk competition in which two players, holding on to a long piece of cloth tied around the waist, try to use their strength and various techniques to wrestle each other down to the ground.

19 밑줄 친 the bloom comes off the rose의 문맥상 의미로 가장 적절한 것은? [1점]

The process of culture shock is so predictable that its stages have been systematized. The first is the honeymoon stage, familiar to those of us who love to travel, but never stay in one place long enough to find out what follows. In the honeymoon stage, the new country and its people seem delightful. It almost feels more comfortable than home. Everything is so different and charming, the people are so nice and the customs are so interesting. Then the bloom comes off the rose. People start to look shallow, selfish, and stupid. The different ways of doing things do not seem interesting any more—just boring. You start to feel exhausted all the time. Culture shock has set in.

Later they were told to choose one of the pens as a gift. The (C) major/majority of them chose the pen they had looked at while they were listening to pleasant background music.

[22~25] 다음 글을 읽고, 빈칸에 들어갈 말로 가장 적절한 것을 고르시오.

22. The seeds of most plants are very _____. They often travel long distances and survive harsh weather before they finally take root in soil. Grape seeds are one good example. If left on the vine, grapes will dry up and become raisins. The raisins will eventually drop off the vine, and some of the seeds will be driven into the soil by rain or by animals walking over them. Many grapes are grown for wine, so they are picked from the vine when ripe. They are then boiled or crushed to extract their juice. The farmers then use whatever remains of the grapes as fertilizer. Amazingly, many grape seeds survive the crushing and boiling. When they are inside the soil, the grape seeds take root and grow.

- ① durable      ② dependent      ③ useful
 ④ nutritious      ⑤ feeble

23. School location can influence children's _____. When new schools are built at a long distance from where their families live, children need to be driven to school, and they are deprived of an opportunity for exercise. On the other hand, if schools are located within walking or biking distance from where they live, and if safe routes to school are provided, then children can make walking or biking a part of their daily lives, establishing good habits that can last lifetime. Besides, when new schools are built, it is considered whether the places where new schools will be built provide plenty of light and fresh air.

24. Go to any vacant lot and look around. Under the "no dumping" signs you will find old tires, rusting sinks, junked refrigerators, and other trash. There are also laws about the care of dogs, but some dog-owners seem to be ignorant of them. They let their dogs run loose and do not clean up after them. Perhaps the most disregarded of all laws are our traffic regulations. More and more drivers are speeding, going through red lights, and double parking on the road. And some drivers, apparently not even worrying about being fined, have been parking in spaces clearly marked as reserved for the physically challenged. These are some examples that show _____.

 ② kind acts of the unknown

25. When the Spanish conqueror Pizarro transferred the capital of Peru from a site in the mountains 11,000 feet above sea level to lowland Lima, it wasn't just for a change of scenery. The Spanish conquerors observed that domestic animals taken to the mountains failed to reproduce. And for over 50 years after the Spanish brought their wives and settled in the Andes, no Spanish children were born in any of the higher altitudes. The Indians, however, were fertile in the same climate. The difference was that over the 9,000 years that the Indians had lived in the Andes, they had developed enlarged lungs, a high red blood cell count, and lower blood pressure, all of which made it possible for them to _____.

- ① predict the weather
 ② resist the Spanish army

 ④ live normal lives at high altitudes

26. 다음 글에 나타난 Angela에 대한 필자의 감정으로 가장 적절한 것은?

When Angela moved to our small town, everything started to change. At the time, some members of the town's swimming club, including myself, were preparing for the National Championships, which were just six months away. I had always been the best, and everyone thought that I would be chosen for the relay race. But now I had the new competition. There was only one place for the butterfly on the relay team, and we both wanted it. For two weeks it was awful. Angela was always the star. She was faster than I, and her form was better, too. My chances of being selected were disappearing fast. My fear caused me to be unfriendly to Angela. I refused to speak to her and never said anything good about her.

The human brain, on the other hand, is incredibly poor at arithmetic.

What a computer is designed to do is, essentially, arithmetic. (①) Any problem, however complex, can somehow be broken down into a well-defined series of arithmetical operations that can be solved by a computer. (②) The computer is amazing not because of its capability to handle arithmetical operations, but because of the fact that it can perform these operations in one billionth of a second without error. (③) Unlike computers, it needs and has always needed outside help to solve the simplest problems. (④) We began by counting on our fingers, and have moved on to better things only with the help of pen and paper, Arabic numerals, mechanical calculators and eventually computers. (⑤)

28. 다음 글에서 전체 흐름과 관계 없는 문장은?

For a long time psychoanalysis was the only psychotherapy practiced in Western society, and it is based on the theories of Sigmund Freud. ① According to Freud's views, psychological disturbances are due to anxiety about hidden conflicts in the unconscious parts of one's personality. ② One job of the psychoanalyst, therefore, is to help make the patients aware of the unconscious impulses and desires that are causing the anxiety. ③ However, some symbols in dreams seem to be universal; in other words, they appear to have the same meaning to people everywhere. ④ Psychoanalysts believe that understanding these unconscious motives is very important. ⑤ If patients can have that kind of understanding, called insight, they have taken the first step toward gaining control over their behavior and freeing themselves of their problems.

What makes a person really attractive? I remember (A) to see/seeing Omar Sharif in Doctor Zhivago and Lawrence of Arabia. At that time, I thought he was astoundingly handsome. But when I saw him being interviewed on television some months later, and heard him (B) declare/declared that his only interest in life was playing bridge, to my great amazement he was transformed before my eyes into an astoundingly unappealing man. (C) Despite/Although a person's good looks may get our attention, it is not an impression that necessarily lasts.

When Jan van Eyck began painting, it was common for artists to use paints called tempera, (A) as one of the ingredients. Artists liked tempera because it dried quickly and made very bright colors, even though it had some disadvantages—for example, artists could not paint tiny details with it. Therefore, when Jan learned new ways to use oil paints that had oil as a main ingredient, it was like a revolution in painting. (B) this oil paint, painters were able to express the light glowing on furniture or on people's skins. They were able to show silk or velvet so that viewers could almost feel the material by looking at the painting.

A movie set is the area (A) which a motion picture is filmed. Most sets are built inside movie studios. These sets are built in large, windowless buildings, called "sound stages." Here, both the picture and the dialogue (B) are recorded. Indoor sets on sound stages are convenient (C) because all the necessary cameras, sound equipment, and wiring can be permanently installed. At other times, however, a movie set is built "on location," which means outside the studio. This enables the film makers (D) to use actual physical landscape as the scenery. If the movie calls for rivers, mountains, or jungles, it may be cheaper to film in real places (E) as to build imitation scenery.

I entered the old, red brick house. As I walked through the creaky oak door, the light barely crept through the dirty old windowpanes. Slowly, I moved into the once-lively living room. While I reached for the light switch, the soft wisp of a spider's web brushed against my hand. The smell and taste of dust were thick in the air. The gray, crushed velvet furniture was covered with thick, clear, plastic sheets. The white walls and ceiling were now a dull, dingy gray, and there were little balls of dust about the floor. Hearing nothing except my own heartbeat, I felt the emptiness crash out loud and hard.

In order to maintain strong bones, people must eat plenty of calcium-rich food. Leafy green vegetables and low-fat dairy products are excellent sources of calcium. They put stiffness into your skeletal system and keep your bones from turning rubbery and fragile. Your body uses calcium for more than keeping your bones strong, however. Calcium also helps cells to divide, it allows muscles to work, and it plays an important role in moving protein and nutrients around inside the body. If you do not absorb enough calcium from what you eat, to do these things, your body will take it from your bones. Because your body does not produce calcium, you must continually replenish the supply.                      *replenish 보충하다

"Boys and girls, playtime is over, get back to work." Most of us learned early in life that work and play are separate, and that if you are playing you could not possibly be working. But to have a livable work environment, a certain amount of playfulness or lightheartedness is required. An innovative environment demands even more playfulness. Assuming the matter-of-fact attitude may seem more efficient, but it constricts one's capacity to generate new solutions when needed. The freedom to be playful expands creative opportunities. The spirit that allows people to wear a peculiar tie or to laugh out loud without fearing what others think is the same spirit that encourages them to consider new ideas.

It was a very hot day in the middle of summer, and there were no trees along the street. Mr. Read closed his shop at half past five, and went out into the street and began walking to the bus stop. He was very fat. The sun shone straight down the street, and in a few minutes Mr. Read felt very hot. A little girl came out of another shop. The girl stayed very near him all the time, and she kicked Mr. Read's shoes several times. Mr. Read looked at her angrily each time. After the fourth time, Mr. Read stopped, turned round and said to the little girl, "What are you doing? Stop following me like that!" "I'm sorry, but don't stop me, please!" the little girl said. The story of a drama is told by the characters. The author communicates his ideas to the audience through the actors. The actor does this through his actions and voice. He must interpret the role to the audience, and in doing so he will put his unique personality on the character. For this reason, the actor is the most important component in the drama. Unless he speaks and moves in the manner in which the imaginary character whose part he is playing would do, the story will not be clearly communicated to the audience. The audience must depend solely on the actor since there can be no reasonable explanation by the author, as we find in a novel. What the actor fails to transmit immediately is lost forever to the audience.

She was born in England in 1821, and emigrated to New York City. One day she decided that she wanted to become a doctor. That was almost impossible for a woman in the middle of the nineteenth century. After writing many letters seeking admission to medical schools, she was finally accepted by a medical school in Philadelphia. After graduating from the medical school in 1849, she wanted to become a surgeon. Unfortunately a serious eye infection forced her to abandon the idea. She found it difficult to start her own practice because she was a woman. In 1857 she and her sister, also a doctor, along with another female doctor, managed to open a new hospital, the first for women and children. Besides being the first female doctor and founding her own hospital, she also established the first medical school for women.

Children who appear intelligent and have normal sight and hearing may nevertheless have learning disabilities such as difficulty in reading; difficulty in writing; difficulty with numbers; and auditory-memory problems that prevent the child from remembering what has just been said. Considered an “invisible” handicap, such learning disabilities can be detected by alert parents before the child goes to school. If the child at about thirty months is not developing normal language skills, something is wrong. Kindergartners should recognize the ABCs. First-graders may commonly reverse their letters, writing a d for a b, but if they are still doing this at the start of second grade, they should be tested for learning disabilities. Proper and early treatment is essential.

[42~43] 다음 글을 읽고, 물음에 답하시오.

Talk of intelligent life on other planets was once the stuff of science fiction or idle speculation. Recently, however, many astronomers have promoted the view that civilizations may be scattered among the stars like grains of sand. The idea has inspired countless novels, movies, and television shows, but has also led to a long and serious scientific search, using huge dish antennas that scan the sky for faint radio signals coming from intelligent aliens.

Now, however, Peter Ward and Donald Brownlee claim that the conventional wisdom is wrong. In their book, they say the search for alien life is likely to fail. Drawing on astronomy, geology, and paleontology, they argue that humans might indeed be alone in the cosmos. They say that science is showing the Earth’s composition and stability to be extraordinarily            (A). Almost everywhere else, the radiation levels are so high and the right chemical elements are so scarce that life cannot evolve into advanced communities.

Dr. Ward, a famous paleontologist specializing in mass extinction, says: “We have finally said out loud what we have thought for so long. Life, at least complex life, is            (B) in the universe.” His colleague Dr. Brownlee comments: “People say the sun is a typical star, but that’s not true. Almost all other environments in the universe are terrible for life. It’s only in the Garden-of-Eden like Earth that it can exist.”

(A)

While their attempt to protect young minds from being harmed is praiseworthy, it does seem a bit misguided in this case. Yes, Rowling’s books do contain supernatural creatures. And, yes, there are such things as witchcraft and magic. But such fantasy elements are part of long tradition of children’s literature. Rowling rightly belongs in the superb company of writers, all of whom used supernatural elements to attract their youthful readers.

(B)

It also needs to be mentioned that the author teaches an important moral lesson. In her fictional world, good almost always triumphs over evil. In fact, it is the characters who lie, cheat, or hurt others that are routinely punished by the end of the story. Those who want to ban Rowling’s books seem to have missed the point. They need to read them more carefully.

(C)

Libraries in at least fourteen states have banned the Harry Potter series written by J. K. Rowling. Claiming that her books contain unnecessary violence and references to satanic worship, several library officials and religious leaders have joined forces. They argue that this remarkably popular and imaginative series is somehow not appropriate for children.

Can governments interfere with free trade? There are four ways in which governments can influence free trade on the international market. One way is by placing protective taxes on imported goods. These taxes help protect domestic producers from foreign competitors. If the prices of imported goods are raised, the demand for domestic products is increased.

Another way governments can influence free trade is by limiting the quantities of specific items that can be imported. (A) a quota is filled, the government prohibits the imports of the specific products. Imposing quotas can be a more effective way to limit foreign competition and increase demand for domestic products than adding tariffs. (B), some nations require licenses to allow domestic importers to import foreign goods. By restricting the numbers of licenses it issues, a government can control free trade.

The fourth way that governments can control free trade is by paying domestic producers of goods which are exported. This helps producers to reduce their costs of production and allows them to lower their prices. Lower prices are very attractive to foreign buyers. This helps to increase the free trade balance in the favor of the exporting nation. These are methods that governments employ to stimulate trade and boost the economy of a country. *tariff 관세

In a lake there once lived a scary monster. His face was black, his belly blue, and his hands and feet were red. He had giant tusks. Whenever any animal came to drink water, the monster suddenly jumped up from the lake, drew it down by force, and swallowed it.

Once a troop of monkeys came to the lake, led by their king. The monkeys were all thirsty. The monster was very pleased at (a) the thought of catching them for food. But the monkey king noted that the footprints of various animals led to the lake but none led away from it. He was suspicious and worried. He gave strict orders that no one was to drink water from the lake until he gave (b) the word. So the monkeys now waited by the waters of the lake, impatiently thirsty. Their discipline was good, however, and the king's orders were completely followed.

Hours passed. Everything was still and quiet. It was a battle of wills between the monkey king and the unknown monster whose existence the former had assumed. It was the monster who gave way first. Unable to restrain (c) his greed, he popped up from the center of the lake and said in a loud voice, "Why don't you drink? I am the guardian of this lake. I tell you that the water is pure, refreshing, cool, and sweet. Drink, my friends, drink."

"No, my good fellow," replied the king, "(d) your wishes will not be fulfilled in the way that you want."

"What do you mean?" asked the monster.

"You won't be able to catch us. We will drink the water of the lake and yet not fall into your trap."

"How will you do that?" shouted the monster, amused at the monkey king's boldness.

"You will see," replied the monkey king. The monkeys then plucked long reeds from the marshes and drank the water through the reeds. Frustrated, the monster disappeared back into the water. The monkey king's cautious approach kept his troop from falling a prey to (e) the cruel being's plot.
