(A)

An American tourist and his wife went to Frankfurt, Germany. They were led by a terrific tour guide. After a sightseeing tour, the tourist rewarded the excellent guide with a bouquet of red roses for her superior service. Unknown to him, red, in Germany, is reserved for lovers. The tourist's wife was angry somewhat when the guide responded positively toward her husband.

(B)

A company wanted to start business in the Middle Eastern market. After months spent negotiating a multi-million-dollar contract, the company representative presented the Saudi Arabian firm with its final proposal. She had it bound in pigskin to show its high quality. Unfortunately, Moslems consider the skin of pigs evil. The proposal and binder were burned, and the company's representative was told to leave the country.

[47~48] 다음 글을 읽고, 물음에 답하시오.

(A)

Nowadays, however, power and authority tend to be shared between husband and wife. Men have started taking responsibility for household chores mostly done by women in the past. They also shop for groceries and toys. Women today have a much greater voice in decisions about purchases and lifestyle. For instance, automakers have found that women constitute a large portion of their consumer market, and they have made a change in car designs accordingly.

(B)

The American women today are very different from the ones a half century ago. In the fifties, husbands were usually considered the leaders of the family. They were the ones who made the major buying decisions and distributed income. The wife's main role was to take care of the home. But even here, she based her actions largely on what would please or help her husband.

(C)

Although changes in the family have been rightly attributed to feminist demands for equality, there is another source for the marked shift in power relations. In the current economy, it's usually essential that both spouses work full-time, and wives who bring in half the family's income are far less willing to turn major decisions over to their husbands than wives in the 1950s.

Last year, my husband's (a) pet rabbit, "Blossom," died. My husband - I'll call him "Edwin" - went into the back yard to feed (b) Blossom one morning and found her lying dead in her cage. He gave Blossom a little funeral and buried (c) her in our yard. Later that day, our neighbor's dog dug up the rabbit. When the neighbor came home for lunch, he found (d) the little body on his doorstep. Thinking his dog had killed Blossom, the neighbor panicked. He ran out, bought another rabbit that looked just like Blossom, and placed her in our cage.

When Edwin returned from work that night, he was stunned to find (e) the rabbit sitting in its cage eating a carrot. He rushed over to Blossom's grave and, of course, found it empty. Edwin immediately concluded that a miracle had occurred - Blossom had returned from the dead. Ever since, my husband has treated the rabbit like a little god. He built an altar for her and puts flowers on it every day. He sits in front of her cage and talks to her. When I come around, he stops talking until I leave. The neighbors have since moved, but last week I ran into the wife and she told me the story.
